TRUE TALES of the OLD WEST

DEVIL'S TOWER

One of the strangest monuments in the world rises 1,200 feet from the plains, not far from Moorcroft, Wyoming. The walls of natural rock rise straight up in fluted columns and can be seen a hundred miles away in every direction. The early Indians of the west who were awed by its appearance, appropriately named it "The Devil's Tower."

REWARD!

TO ME DEAD

Alamo

WANTED - ONE CENT REWARD

When he was a youth, Kit Carson, famous Indian scout and trapper, was bound to his uncle to learn the saddler's trade. When Kit ran away because he was dissatisfied with his environment, his uncle offered the insignificant reward of one cent for his capture, to show the small value he put on the lad's services.

A USEFUL COMMODITY

Contrary to popular belief cowboys do not wear their ten gallon hats for appearances sake. It would indeed be difficult to find any piece of wearing apparel so useful to a cowboy as his ten gallon hat. In rainy weather the brim of the hat serves as an umbrella, while at other times the upper side of the brim is often used as a drinking cup because of its ability to hold water. During hot weather the hat is useful as a sunshade, and in cold weather the sides of the brim can be pressed down to serve as earmuffs. It is often used as a fan for kindling fires and at other times as a pillow or placed under the hollow of the cowboy's back to make him more comfortable while lying on the ground.

SOMETIMES I GET SHOT
FULLO'HOLES!

SAVED BY A BULLET

San Antonio's famous Alamo, the cradle of Texas liberty, was saved for posterity by a single bullet - and strangely enough one that killed a defender, not an attacker. The last heroic defender, determined to blow up the mission-fortress rather than surrender it to the Mexicans, was shot before he could touch off the powder supply.

GETTING HITCHED

Almost one hundred years before the coming of the automobile, the city of San Antonio, Texas, inaugurated the parking meter idea into law. Beginning in January, 1809, riders and muleteers were charged twenty five cents for the privilege of hitching their mounts and beasts of burden. Even then, the hitching zone was restricted to the area behind the church on the main plaza. Anyone convicted of hitching anywhere else was fined two pesos.

* * *

SHOOTING IT UP

Al Jennings, notorious gunman of the old West, perfected a highly popular shooting stunt — that of bouncing an empty tin can along the road ahead of him with bullets from his six shooters. He was able to keep the can rolling, without missing a shot, while emptying the pistols held in both hands.

* * *

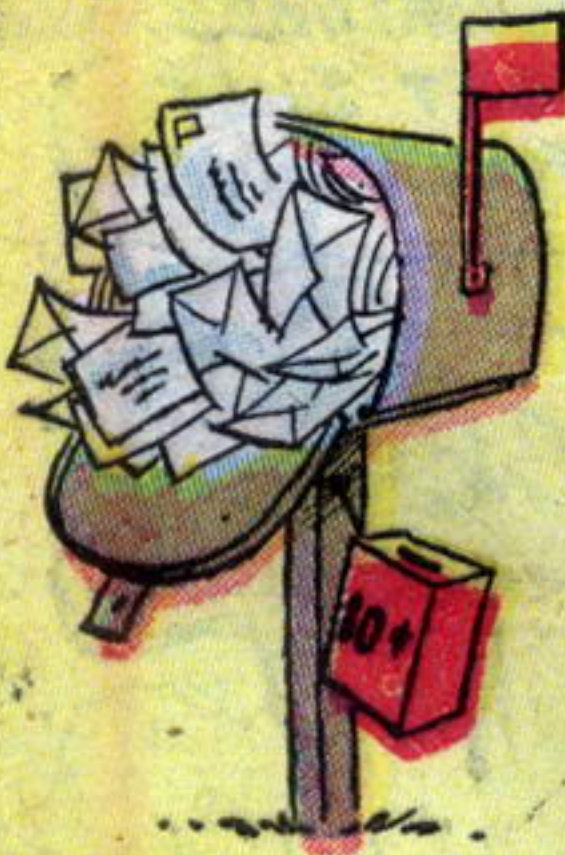

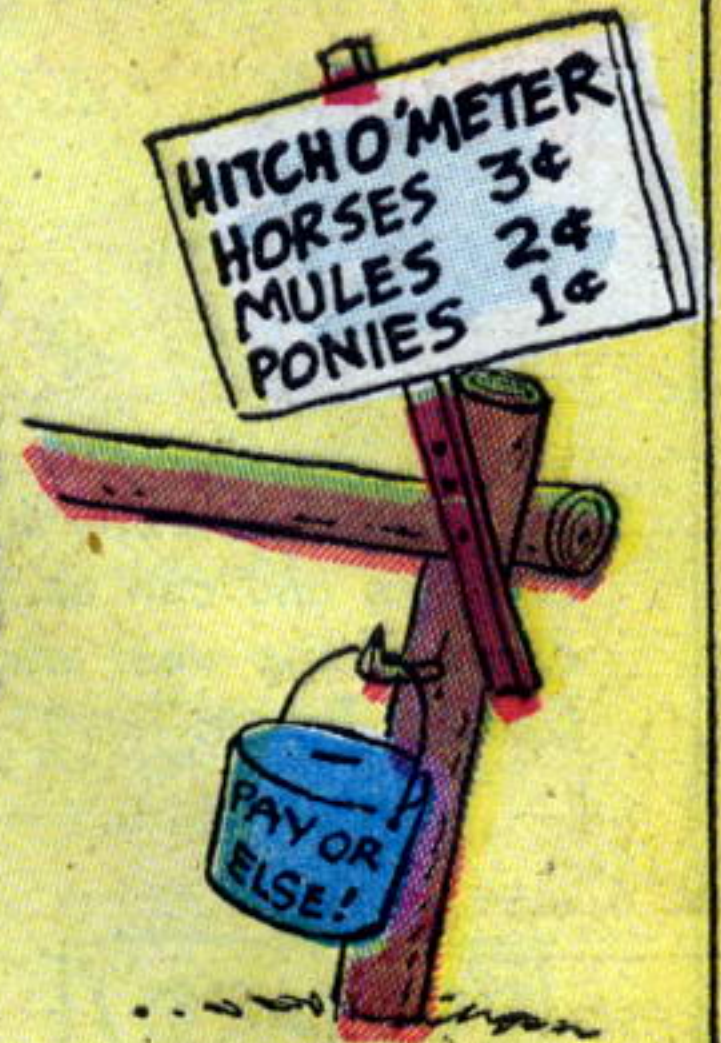

OPERATION C.O.D.

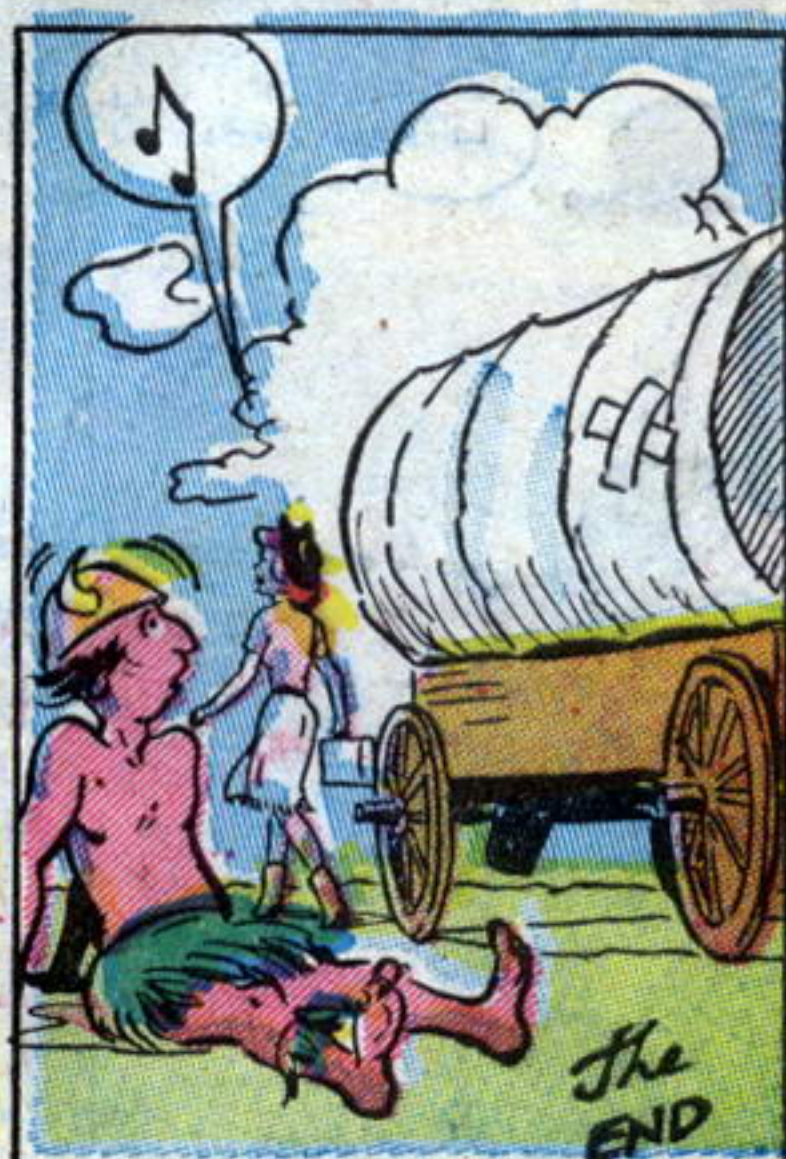

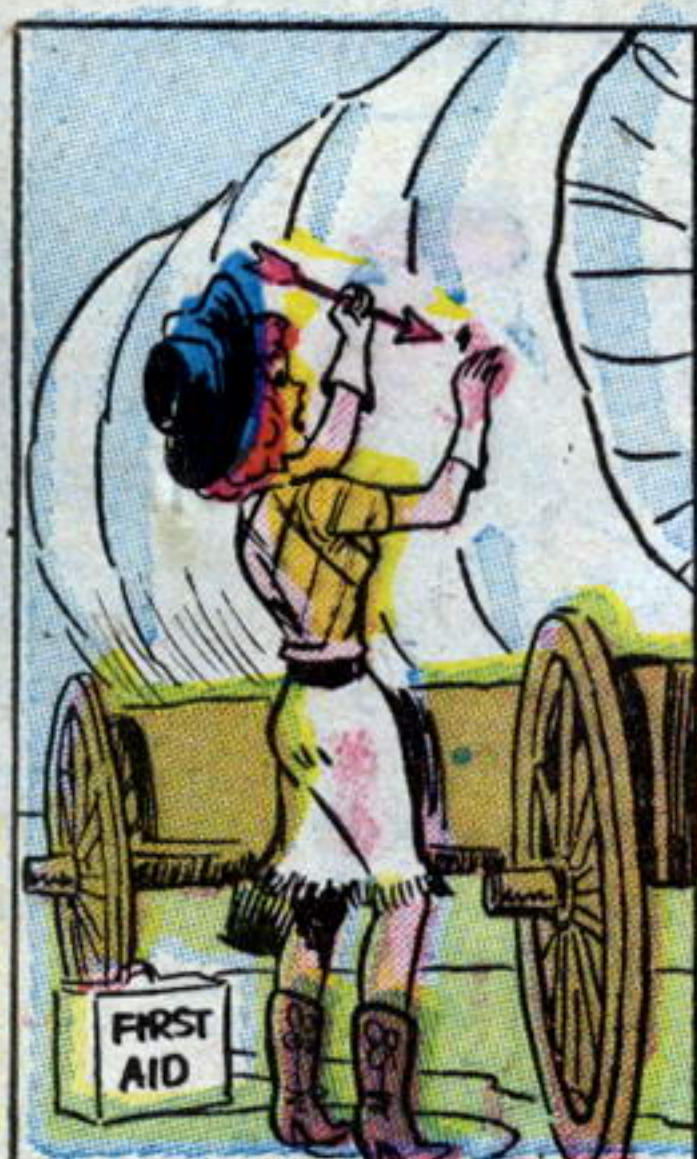

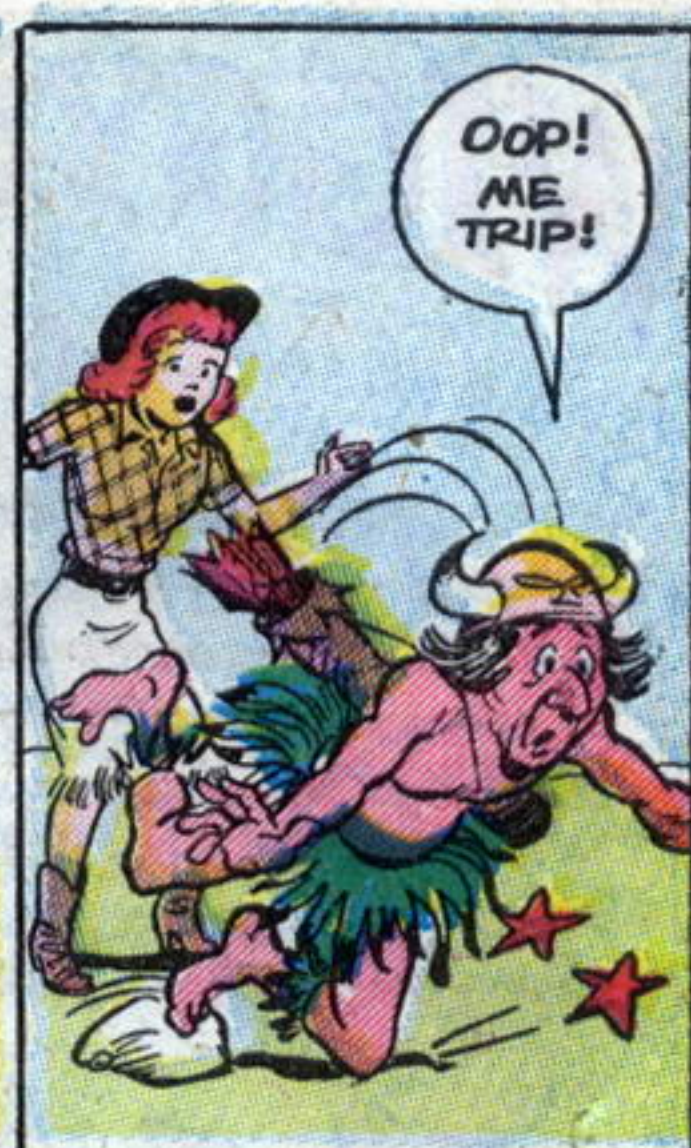

During the nineteenth century, citizens of Lee County, Texas, had a practice of leaving their letters at Brown's Mill with a dime in the box for carrying charges. When enough dimes had accumulated to pay a mail carrier, one would take the letters to the nearest post office. Finally the citizens got a post office of their own. They could think of no name more appropriate than Dime Box, a name which remained for many years.

LIGHTNING ACTION

The popular rodeo feature known as Bull-Dogging, in which a cowboy jumps from his horse, downs the steer and makes its legs come off the ground, has long been a great favorite with spectators at the arena. The record time for successfully Bull-Dogging a steer was established at Madison Square Garden in the rodeo of 1943 by Dick Truitt, a cowboy who performed the feat in five seconds flat.
